What if people lived and worked closer to transit?
What if new roads and transit were built?
How would travel conditions change?

On the evening of February 15, citizens will have a chance to talk about how different patterns of growth might affect driving, congestion, and transit use in the region. The meeting will be sponsored by the National Capital Region Transportation Planning Board (TPB) in partnership with the Fairfax County Federation of Citizens

Associations. Fairfax County Supervisor Cathy Hudgins, Transportation Planning Board (TPB) Chairman, will help lead the discussion.
